splunk>

The CISO Report: Financial

Services

Evolving intersections across AI, collaboration and technology stack security.

Today's financial services (ISDs may interset more and wield more influence with their boards, yet some things never change As compliance regulations tighten and financial crime acceleration financial services CISOs feel increased pressure to deal with threats faste, expanded ettack surfaces, fraud, and more nombler which those is more within the properties of all compliances threated in more within the properties of all the compliances of the compliance of the complin While security leaders breat for more complex open threats, that solity to access these leases inplies on integrating and considering dispersist elementages, mean; the right investments is expectly infersit values, and righting five with fire by using A to colorar their cyber defenses. Data from our DISO Report Hustotte how financial services DISO are re-vegating these challenges.

Today's financial services CISOs may interact more and wield more influence with their boards, yet some things never change. As compliance regulations tighten and financial crime accelerates, financial services CISOs feel increased pressure to deal with threats faster, expanded attack surfaces, fraud, and more complex cyber threats — many driven by generative AI.